No Climate Justice Without Immigrant Justice

Climate change exacerbates economic hardships and other challenges, forcing people to leave their homes and lives they know. Families that are unable to sustain themselves in their own countries have no option but to seek refuge elsewhere. Almost half of people immigrating today were affected by a climate disaster in their home country.

The interests that demonize migrants and refugees are firmly aligned with the interests of fossil fuel billionaires. Their insatiable drive for profit endangers us all. The climate justice movement must include justice for immigrants.

Here's what we can do:

1. Stop climate change by stopping rising emissions from fossil fuels
2. Debunk the myth that immigrants are a threat to your country and your way of life
3. Learn about the important roles immigrants play in our country
4. Support the work of immigrant organizations and advocates
